MILL BOOK AUTHOR LECTURES AT U. LOWELL

LOWELL, MASS. - Steve Dunwell, professional photographer and author of a new book, The Run of the Mill, will speak at the University of Lowell, March 6, in a lecture series on "Alternative Technologies: Past, Present, Future," jointly sponsored by the U. Lowell Technology and Human Values Program and College of Engineering. The public is invited to this free 11:30 AM lecture in room 301 of the Fox Student Union Building on Pawtucket Street, across the Aiken Street Bridge,

Dunwell's presentation, illustrated with slides, is titled "The Run of the Mill: New England Textile Manufacture; Its Machinery, Its Workers, Its Legacy."

The Run of the Mill, published by Godine Press in 1978, has been reviewed widely, most recently in the New York Times Book Review. The pictorial narrative traces the dominion, decline, and enduring impact of the New England textile industry. It details the Lowell era and is a timely record in light of the development of the Lowell National Historical Park.

Steve Dunwell's publications include Massachusetts: A Scenic Discovery and Word in the World, 1975, as well as photographs in "Time" and "National Geographic" magazines.
